"That must be Helen," Fiona said.

Finley's hearing aid batteries might've been low, but he sure heard Helen throw a tantrum.

Fiona and Finley looked at each other. They didn't know what to do so they gave Anne and Helen space. When Finley saw someone drawing water at the spout, he took a moment to clean up.

Anne looked over at Finley. "Aha!"

Anne carried Helen to the water spout. She put Helen's hand underneath the water and spelled the letters W-A-T-E-R into Helen's other hand.

Helen stood still. Then she smiled like she finally understood the letters Anne signed in her hand meant something. W-A-T-E-R was the name of the liquid she felt! She Moe sat on the swing. He went super high.

Galaxy stared at Norman. Norman stared at Galaxy. This happens every day. Galaxy wants Norman to pet him. Norman doesn't like anything with fur, including Uncle Abe with a beard.

"Hey Moe," I said. "Do you know any jokes? Joe told me a joke."

"Nope." Moe said.

Finally, Joe came back.

"It made a mark, but I can barely see it." Joe said.

"I told you, it was a rock." Moe said.

"That means: IT'S A METEORITE!" I screamed.

"Wow!" Joe shouted.

"I knew it the whole time." Moe said. "I just didn't want you to get your hopes up."

"Let me see." Norman said.

Joe gave him the Meteorite. Norman put

Code Cracker

With his score of 9.3, Jones had made the final round, along with his new friends Imato and Korg.

"How you feeling, bro?" Gemma said. She had come into the sick room to check up on Jones.

"I feel like someone's scraped out my insides," Jones said weakly.

"Hang in, there," she said. "Just one more dive to go, then we feast."

But Jones was in no mood to talk about food. "I think I'll just have a cracker. But hey—" Jones had just had an idea. He pulled Gemma in close. "I want you to find out more about those Akains. How they work. Maybe one of them will let you scan their operating system."

"Um, but, why?" Gemma looked curiously
